

Sojitz Invests in Healthcare Startup Providing Telehealth Services
- Participating in the Integration of Medicine with ICT & AI via 5G -

Sojitz Corporation (“Sojitz”) has invested by way of third-party allocation of shares in a startup, Tetsuyu Healthcare Holdings Pte. Ltd. (Head Office: Singapore; Co-Founders: Shinsuke Muto*<sup>1</sup> and Ng Li Lian*<sup>2</sup>; “THH”), which has developed a remote healthcare system utilizing ICT and AI capabilities.

The system was developed by integrating home healthcare management in Japan with advanced ICT and AI image processing technology, and is already being offered in Singapore. It enables doctors, nurses, caregivers, and patients to connect with one another via video conferencing, allowing clinical monitoring and consultations to be carried out remotely. The system also stores the patient’s daily health information and medical records in the cloud, and utilizes AI technology to assess skin conditions and create treatment plans. This benefits patients who have conditions such as diabetic ulcers and pressure injuries, and is currently being piloted with the University of Tokyo and other medical facilities, with the goal of early introduction to the Japanese market.

[Telehealth service utilizing ICT and AI technologies]

Sojitz aims to promote the introduction of this telehealth system not only in Japan, but also in China and Southeast Asia by utilizing its global network. Furthermore, as part of its long-term growth strategy, Sojitz seeks to move into the primary care*<sup>3</sup> industry and create new combined medical care and ICT/ AI business opportunities that leverage 5G through the new telehealth platform it has acquired from this investment.

Moving forward, society will continue to face challenges posed by escalating medical costs due to aging societies and changes in disease patterns, as well a lack of healthcare professionals and hospital beds. Sojitz will continue to contribute to the development of healthcare to solve these issues by working with startup companies who offer promising technologies and services in order to create and grow new global businesses, so that people around the world can lead healthy, happy, and fulfilling lives.
